SEA TWILIGHT.

[Household Words.]
Cold falls the autumn eve on sand and shingle,
The breakers lift themselves with rush and roar,
And myriad ghost-like voices surge and mingle,
Along the lonely shore.

Hope has long since with summer hours
Abated,
And faith abates to fro, like yonder tide,
And patient love, though she so long hath waited,
Is not yet glorified.

Oh, thou heart's dearest, take me, hide me,
Hold me
Close in the tranquil keeping of thy breast,
For storm and strife and stress of fears and
And the great sea's unrest.

NAPOLEON III IN AMERICA.

His Admiration of American Geniuses—
How a Fortune Was Created.

[Household Words.]
Napoleon III. admires American geniuses because it is creative genius; he grows indignant over French character that humiliates itself more and more in order that a man may become a statesman, whether a minister or a stone-breaker on the highway. Turning toward King Jerome and Prince Murat, he said: "I am sure you are not come to Saint Cloud this morning solely to drink Burgundy wine; you must have, as usual, your pocket filled with requests—one for a decoration, one for a license to sell tobacco, one for a senatorship. What a city! Why do not those people make a fortune—that is true liberty—instead of striving to enter the service of the state and spend their lives in slavery."

"Americans grafted upon Englishmen are real freemen; they are the masters of the universe because they are their own masters. For example, when I was in New York I dined at a table d'hôte beside a poor devil who had no shirt to his back, but who fascinated me by the daring of his schemes. It was extravagant, but sublime. That high-toned, popular fellow, who, in France, would have died a tax collector or a quid-driver in an administrative department, possessed, one year later, $12,000,000 in cash. And he had not stolen the money, either. One day he was an hour late at the table d'hôte, so he said to us by way of apology: 'You see, I have made a fortune.'"

"As we looked at him rather dubiously, for he had not yet bought a shirt, he spread upon the table a roll of paper upon which he had drawn the plan of a city of 20,000 inhabitants with churches, fountains, squares, and monuments—a stock exchange not being forgotten, of course. All this was fair play, but reasoned out to perfection; it was a real city of the future, such as we shall have some day in France. My man had not confined himself to designing the town, but had purchased the ground on which to build, and made his contracts with masons and carpenters. They were about to lay the foundation and make the streets. 'And you city will rise like Thebes, when Amphion played upon the lyre.' 'Yes, and they will not build, as in Europe, one house at a time; all will be commenced on the same day, and completed at the same time.'"

And, after a pause, "what I tell you now," continued Napoleon III., sounds like a tale, but our fellow-diner was in earnest; he had secured the refusal of the site, and shown the contracts to bankers, who perceived that there was a fortune in the affair for themselves as well as for him; all of them took the bit in their teeth, and thus the country reckoned an additional state. On that day I promised myself that on my return to Paris—a thing I never doubted—I should rebuild the capital, and this I shall do, with God's help."

The Dog Didn't Run.

[Detroit Free Press.]
"I like a lawsuit," he said as he entered the central station yesterday and placed his hat on two chairs.

"Do you want to sue somebody?"
"Dot's her exactly! I want a lawsuit dot will make somebody suffer. I vvas made a fool of again."

"Vvvel, I had in my saloon a stuffed wolf. I buy him in New York unit pay $25. Ha vvas my sign, you know. I keep him on a shelf, and everybody who comes in speaks of how how he looks."

"Vvvel, dis morning two fellows come mit a big dog, and one of dem says:
"Bill, dat vvas a big dog o' yours, but I'll bet he has no mind in him. He runs away from dot stuffed wolf."

"Dot man Bill he looks up and grins and says:
"Vvvel, I dunno. I go you dar drinks dot he don't run away."

"I had so like to see der fun, and tells der wolf down on der floor. Bill he puts his dog to sick 'em, and—vvas, I like somebody to kick me."

"Then the dog didn't run!"
"Dot dog plays up in my wolf, and in one minute dot specimen vvas all torn up mit kindling wood and I vvas $35 out of pocket! Hey! What kind of treatment vvas dot on a man who pays taxes in two wards and vvas headquarters for a campaign club?"

"It was too bad."
"Can I sue somebody?"
"Hardly."
"Does nobody pay me $35?"
"I guess not."

"All right, captain—all right! I puy me another wolf right away. I haf him stuffed mit dynamite. Eafery time a dog comes along I put dot wolf down and call sick 'em! and if I don't be abused, before I vvas six months older you may pelt I vvas a goat! Dot vvas me, captain. I vvas good-hearted, but draw der line on stuffed wolves."

Heavy Draughts.

[The Argonaut.]
An eminent English physician, on oath, the other day, said that he had known men who took their sixty minutes of punch per day, and seemed to whit the worse for the indulgence. The twenty-one-tumbler man is, or used to be, a common product of Irish and Scotch conviviality. Boswell was of that sort. So was John Philpot Curran, and Erskine, on occasion, compassed his two dozen hot toddies. There was a good old soul, who died a few weeks ago in the Rue Vivienne, in Paris, in the house where Mr. P. Egan for some time established the flying exchequer of the Land League. This celebrity was a retired shipping agent from Marseilles, and the daily draught in which he did penance comprised four bottles of Burgundy, four of claret, and two of champagne—this allowance being exclusive of the "petite verve" and occasional drinks.
